After setting the huge pace for the measured mile the Briton got a flat tire between the 12th and 13th miles of the 13 mile straight-away course.

Campbell's speed machine was brought to the flats from Wendover, 10 miles away, shortly before 6 o'clock this morning for the second trial run in his announced intention of attaining a speed of over 300-miles per hour.

After preliminaries had been disposed of the Briton jumped into the long low-swinging racer and was off at 7:11 (P. S. T.).

GENEVA, Sept. 3.—Great Britain and France split today on the procedure to be followed when the League of Nations council meets tomorrow in a last desperate effort to find a path out of the Italo-Ethiopian tangle.

Premier Pierre Laval of France was understood to have informed Captain Anthony Eden of Britain his government could not join with England in submitting a report on the recent tripartite Ethiopian negotiations in Paris, which failed when Italy refused to accept a compromise.

Confirms Differences

Laval's decision confirmed prevalent belief France and Britain have widely divergent attitudes as to how the problem should be met and indicated strongly England would demand full league action in the crisis even to the extent of imposing sanctions if necessary.

It has long been known France opposes this course of action for fear of hopelessly alienating Italy and endangering the general European situation.

FORT MYERS, Fla., Sept. 3.—The smashing hurricane, which swept out of the Caribbean last night, was believed to be approaching this city early today and was expected to reach here shortly before noon.

Fragmentary reports reaching here from Key West and Everglades early today declared that so far as could be determined no lives had been lost in either of those places and comparatively small property damage had resulted.

LAS CRUCES, N. M., Sept. 3.—An emergency call for men was sent out from Hatch, N. M., about 30 miles north of here, early today.

Flood waters were descending on the town following a torrential downpour that started shortly after midnight and lasted more than two hours. Men were needed to erect sandbag barricades and repair dikes, it was reported.

LINER ON ROCKS OFF COAST OF FLORIDA; OCEAN IS ROUGH

Rescue Ships Balked by High Seas; Second Call for Help Sounds Warning; Steamship Dixie Returning to New York from New Orleans.

MIAMI, Fla., Sept. 3.—With the Morgan liner Dixie pounding to pieces beneath their feet, 400 persons huddled on rain-swept decks today and watched prayerfully as rescue steamers tried repeatedly to find their way through the treacherous shoals off Craysfort reef, 50 miles south of here.

Battered and smashed by the worst storm that had struck this section since 1928, the Dixie crashe into the reef early today while en route from New Orleans to New York.

The Reaper, a Standard Oil tanker, was the first vessel to reach the vicinity of the stricken liner, but driving seas and heavy winds made it impossible for the Reaper to reach its side immediately. At 10:30 a. m. (E. S. T.) the Reaper was standing by about two miles away, awaiting the first favorable moment to speed to the side of the stranded ship.

Six Others Near

Six other vessels were reported in the vicinity and standing by, but the Reaper was the smallest of the group and it was believed it had a better chance than the others to find its way through the treacherous shoals surrounding the crippled vessel.

Meanwhile, the exact condition of the Dixie remained unknown, as rescue vessels had requested it to remain silent to give them freer use of the radio channels in directing the attempted rescue.

Also, it was known that the Dixie's radio was in bad condition, and rescuers were anxious that it conserve its power for later emergencies.

The Dixie, flagship of the Morgan line and its newest craft, had 250 passengers and a crew of 140 when it sailed out of New Orleans Saturday night enroute to New York. It is a vessel of 4,917 tons.

Driven ahead of winds of hurricane proportions, the Dixie crashed upon the reefs without warning, and shortly after midnight its first faint call for help was picked up here by the coast guard station.

"Have 250 passengers and crew of 140 aboard," was the message Capt. E. W. Sundstrom sent out through the howling winds. "Being pounded heavily but not taking much water at present. Seas and wind very heavy."

The coast guard station here picked up the first faint call for aid.

Captain Veteran

Shortly after midnight the master of the Dixie, Capt. Sundstrom, veteran of the southern run and experienced in many a tropical

NEW OHIO TAX RULINGS MADE

Motor Vehicles Contracted for Prior to January 27, 1935.
All motor vehicles for which an order was placed prior to January 27, 1935, and for the sale of which an exemption from the sales tax is claimed, must be delivered to the purchaser on or before November 1, 1935, in order to avoid the sales tax. Any delivery subsequent to that date will be subject to the Ohio Sales Tax where the reason for exemption is that the order was taken prior to the effective date of the Sales Tax Law, and it shall be the duty of the vendor in such cases to collect the full and exact amount of the sales tax due on such transactions.

License Requirements by Transient Vendors, Vehicles
Vendors having no fixed place of business and not selling from a vehicle shall procure one license in the county where the permanent mailing address to which all tax matters shall be addressed. A change in this address will necessitate a new license to be procured in the county of new permanent address. Failure to set forth or establish such an address will necessitate a license in every county in which sales are made.

Vendors with no fixed place of business and selling from vehicles must procure a vendor's license for each vehicle, which vehicle shall constitute his place of business. Such license shall cover all sales made in any county in the State, provided, however, the application for such license sets forth a residence or permanent mailing address in this State, to which all communications from the Tax Commission may be sent. A change in this address will necessitate a new license. Failure to so stipulate such an address will necessitate a license for each truck in every county in which sales are made from that vehicle.

Vendors operating under the provisions of this ruling will be required to furnish one Informational Return, covering all sales made in the State of Ohio under that license.

tucky Derby of the air" came within an ace of being the first air viking in history to repeat the feat. Finishing the ninth of ten laps a good seven miles ahead of Neumann, Turner's plane began spewing smoke, and the Pacific coast ace hastily pulled out, and made a "deadstick" landing in full view of the assembled thousands, who lustily cheered his clever work in avoiding a disaster.

Neumann, in second place at the time, brought his high-winged monoplane, "Mister Mulligan," on to win handily, despite a magnificent race made by Steve Wittman, of Oshkosh, Wis., in a tiny plane of his own design. Wittman finished second.

Won Greve Classic
The more than 125,000 rabid aviation fans who fought their way into the huge muni airport were practically unanimous in their approbation of Neumann as the meet's outstanding flyer. He had previously won the Louis Greve classic for small planes by sweeping all three of the event's heats. In addition, he put up the meet's most virile demonstration of courage in so doing, by cracking up in landing a stunt ship a few hours after his first-heat Greve victory, and coming back a few moments later to achieve his second-heat triumph.

The new movie, "China Seas," is not, it turns out, a sequel to "Africa Speaks."

through some form of taxation to take care of the needs of relief people who are not worked by WPA.

Roughly speaking, Uncle Sam will pay at least 80 per cent of the bill for WPA, the local district about 20 per cent. Contrasted with this is the outlook that the local district will have to meet the cost of the dole in its entirety as far as is known now. Many counties and municipalities over the country are sold on the idea that working their people is far better than some form of dole, and are making every effort to co-operate with WPA by pledging themselves to furnish material and in some cases part of the skilled labor necessary for the various projects.

Some cities, townships, and counties have pledged themselves to co-operate in the performance of considerably more work than can be done in the next year. In such sub-divisions the projects considered must worthwhile will undoubtedly be worked through to completion first.

Many of these sub-divisions are borrowing funds. To meet their share of the cost of WPA work projects, others are diverting funds.

Through the WPA work program the local districts can have their people taken care of at a relatively small cost to themselves and at the same time, secure valuable improvements for their communities. On the other hand, dole money once spent is gone forever and no lasting benefit has been derived.

STUDENT PROGRAM TOLD TO McDOWELL

George McDowell, county superintendent of schools, received bulletins Tuesday morning of a new student aid program sponsored by the government under the National Youth Administration.

The administration has allotted funds to enable young persons, between the ages of 16 and 25 who are members of relief families, to obtain education. The program also explains 5000 college students will be aided to obtain graduation. The aid provided high school students is in the form of part time jobs enabling the students to earn an average of $6 a month while attending schools. Applications for the aid must be made to the high school principals, the bulletin stated.

There, it was stated, they will be joined by 1,500 irregulars who have been waiting for the past three days at various points along the railroad, unsheltered from storms and tropical sun.

Upon arrival at Direddawn, the force will join 3,000 other troops and then move toward Ogaden. Commanding the troops is Dedjazmats (General) Hapte Micael, of Licabas, chief of the imperial guard for the past three years, who was recently promoted to his new position as Dedjazmats and named governor of Juro in south-eastern Ethiopia.

The coast guard and other Caribbean liners, plowing the mountainous seas, swung into instantaneous action.

For a while there was only an agonized silence.

Then, shortly after 4:30 a. m. (EDT) came another message from the stricken steamer.

"We are pounding heavily and taking much water," it clipped in the terse chatter of the wireless. "Sea and wind heavy. We have 400 aboard and need immediate assistance."

Police did not learn the name of the owner but warned him to use his brakes when parking on the Court-st grade.

"Camels don't get your Wind"

FAMOUS SWIMMERS AGREE

Champion swimmers speak with authority when they discuss sound wind—healthy nerves—and Camels. Buster Crabbe, champion in the 400-meter free-style Olympic event, says: "I have smoked Camels for years. If you go in for sports at all, I'd advise Camels. You'll find, as I did, that Camels are so mild they never get your wind or cut your endurance."

What Buster Crabbe says is confirmed by Helene Madison, girl who rose to Olympic fame; and by Stubby Kruger and Josephine McKim. So turn to Camels. Enjoy those costlier tobaccos in Camel's matchless blend. Smoke all you wish. Athletes say, "Camels don't disturb your nerves or wind."

Can We Stay Out?

There are thoughtful students of the subject who say that if war breaks out in Europe the United States cannot possibly stay out of it. They are convincing reasons for their opinions. Americans, they say, are an emotional people. Injustice and oppression, outrages by great nations against small nations, and inhumanity in its numerous forms, arouse them to righteous wrath and make them clay in the hands of propagandists.

And then, too, there are the economic aspects of the situation. There is money to be made in war. Trade along certain lines booms and men with money to lend are glad to get it out in the hope of a rich return. Why, they ask, should they be required to forego the possibilities of profit when they would be within their legal and moral right in taking advantage of them?

Eventually, it is claimed, these influences, which play so heavily upon the sentimentality and the acquisitive natures of men, break down the forces of common sense and prepare the field for the super-patriot, the profiteer, the saber-rattler and the sincere idealist who believes we owe a debt to humanity.

These dangerous possibilities are actual, not fancied. But when they arise we should keep our emotions and our sympathies under rigid control. One way of achieving this end is by keeping the past vividly in mind. If we are fully aware of the realities, we will not yield before the pressure of the sentimentalists.

And the realities are not difficult to remember. They concern about 50,000 young men killed, 200,000 others more or less seriously wounded, a debt of twenty-two billion dollars of our own and loans of eleven billions to our allies.

If we remember these facts, the prospects of our remaining out of war will be improved.

DEFENDING DADDY

What little things change one's mind. The cause of this original comment is the dispute between two representatives in congress, the gentleman from Texas, Mr. Maverick, and the gentleman from California, Mr. Kramer, who have opposite ideas about what residents of the United States ought to be permitted to say.

Naturally, folk here and there have taken sides and just as naturally some have disliked Mr. Kramer. But it's fairly certain a few don't dislike him as much as they did since he clashed with Mr. Maverick.

When the two got in an argument in the speaker's lobby Mr. Maverick rung in Mr. Kramer's father. True, the observation was not offensive. Neither was it pertinent. So Mr. Kramer busted Mr. Maverick in the jaw and said: "You cuss me all you want to, but keep my father's name out of it."

All of which only proves that men are but old boys of larger growth and even that in air-conditioned chambers "So's you old man" are still fighting words.

Besides, "My daddy can lick your daddy with one hand tied behind his back."

CONTRACT BRIDGE

By E. V. SHEPARD, Famous Bridge Teacher

A DANGEROUS TWO-BID

AN OPENING two-bid obligates keeping bidding open until game is reached. North held a single biddable suit, and that suit lacked its three top honors. The hand was worth eight tricks, rendering it a much better opening bid of 4-hearts than 2-hearts. The latter is a dangerous call as partner must expect better heart tops than are held. In case partner is strong the opening two-bid probably will mean a dangerously high contract. Only North and South were vulnerable.

giving West a single heart trick. A low heart would lead West led his fourth-best club. Declarer dared not play his Ace of the suit. He had to let it run and East's Q fell to South's K.

Dummy ran off its three top diamond honors, leaving West to let go his lowest spade. East's play is useless to note. He was trickless. The fifth trick was taken with the Ace of clubs. To enter his own hand declarer was forced to resort to Vienna Coup tactics, leading a low heart and playing his Ace, thus establishing two top hearts in West's hand, to be retained through forced discards.

Two club tricks were taken. Of course West followed suit. Dummy led go two hearts. At the end of the eighth trick the three players holding tricks had the hands shown below.

Declarer led a diamond. West let go his last club. Dummy discarded a heart. On the last diamond led West had to let go one of his hearts.

Declarer felt confident that West held the missing K of spades, but he took no chances. He let go dummy's low spade and retained the J-10 of hearts. West was put in with his K of hearts and had to lead a spade, giving dummy for the twelfth and thirteenth tricks a spade and a heart, just fulfilling the doubled small slam contract.

An opening lead of the K of hearts would have handed declarer a small slam. A heart, 5 diamond and a heart, and a black suit, just by contract.

THE DEVIL'S MANSION

Janet looked at the note several times.

DISCOURAGED after a long wait for Nita, Janet sat down. Nita had not heard. She must be outside. Far away, so far away she could not hear the bell. Perhaps she had gone to the town of Boisevain. . . .

How long, though, would it take Nita to walk those six miles to Boisevain and those six miles back? Hours, probably. Hours. . . .

Why did Nita want her to stay with Miss Boisevain? Janet stole a look at the woman lying on the chair bed. Did she just imagine or was it true that her face seemed happy and a slight smile in her features? . . .

On the table near the door, Janet remembered that the other, the one of the black haired man, was under Miss Boisevain's pillow. She herself had placed it there, at the woman's bidding, along with the few letters. . . .

and she drew back, a sob in her throat. . . .

The hand was ice cold! . . .

The slight sound of a door opening and Janet sprang forward. It might be Rajah! With glazed eyes she looked at the swinging door. . . .

He opened slowly, and Nita, appeared, her face wet with sweat, her hair straggling over her plain face. Her dress was streaked with dirt and her hands were red and soiled. She walked straight to the dead woman, with not so much as a glance at Janet. . . .

"Nita! Where have you been? . . . I've been so worried, so frightened. . . . Nita wrote it for me. Did you bring help?" Janet rushed to the table and brought her a pad and pencil. . . .

The servant still did not look at her. She was breathing hard and her shoulders were bent a little. . . .

Janet looked at the note several times. The words made any impression on her mind. . . .

"I have been digging her grave," . . .

The girl stumbled to the chair bed, and reached under the pillow for the letters and the miniature. She was sobbing hysterically as she followed Nita through the kitchen and into the garden, to the fresh grave near the stone bench. . . .

She waited for a sound from the living room. There was none. It was as if Nita were in there alone. . . .

Then taking heart, she ran quickly out the back door, and turned the corner of the house. The stable was in full view, and Blair Rodman was sitting at the high window. A low cry left her lips, when she saw he had a white bandage around his head. How pale his face was. . . .

Blistering Note to Soviet Didn't Stop Envoy's Tennis Match

WASHINGTON—While Roosevelt's hot protest to Soviet Russia was sizzling over the wires to Ambassador Bullitt in Moscow, Ambassador Troyanovsky was at his summer home in Annapolis playing tennis. . . .

Playing as his partner in doubles was rotund Robert F. Kelley, Chief Russian expert of the State Department. . . .

Kelley had written the first draft of the note then being delivered in Moscow, knew almost every comma and semi-colon in it. Ambassador Troyanovsky knew nothing about the note. Both men played serenely on. . . .

Suddenly a servant announced a telephone call from Washington. It was a newspaperman giving the Ambassador first news of the most bluntly worded diplomatic protest in American peace-time history. . . .

The Ambassador listened, came back, resumed his tennis. He said nothing to Kelley. . . .

After his tennis Mr. Kelley calmly motored back to Washington, went to the State Department, next day advised that diplomatic relations with Russia be severed. . . .

NOTE—Kelley has never been in Russia, was chief adviser to Hughes, Kellogg and Stimson against Russian recognition, urged the Roosevelt Administration against resumption of diplomatic negotiations. . . .

Friend of Labor

One of the most vociferous self-styled champions of labor in the past has been Senator Huey P. Long. . . .

When the $4,000,000,000 Works Relief Bill was up he stalked the floor of the chamber for days, denouncing the President for insisting on his plan to pay security wages instead of the prevailing wage. And when Senators LaFollette and Wagner switched their votes and sided with the President, Huey accused the two liberal leaders of "selling out." . . .

That was last winter. The scene changes to Louisiana. Several weeks ago George E. Wallace, second vice-president of the Louisiana State Federation of Labor, wrote an open letter branding

Can We Stay Out?

HERS are thoughtful students of the subject who say that if war breaks out in Europe the United States cannot possibly stay out of it. They are convincing reasons for their opinions. Americans, they say, are an emotional people. Injustice and oppression, outrages by great nations against small nations, and inhumanity in its numerous forms, arouse them to righteous wrath and make them clay in the hands of propagandists.

And then, too, there are the economic aspects of the situation. There is money to be made in war. Trade along certain lines booms and men with money to lend are glad to get it out in the hope of a rich return. Why, they ask, should they be required to forego the possibilities of profit when they would be within their legal and moral right in taking advantage of them?

Eventually, it is claimed, these influences, which play so heavily upon the sentimentality and the acquisitive natures of men, break down the forces of common sense and prepare the field for the super-patriot, the profiteer, the saber-rattler and the sincere idealist who believes we owe a debt to humanity.

These dangerous possibilities are actual, not fancied. But when they arise we should keep our emotions and our sympathies under rigid control. One way of achieving this end is by keeping the past vividly in mind. If we are fully aware of the realities, we will not yield before the pressure of the sentimentalists.

And the realities are not difficult to remember. They concern about 50,000 young men killed, 200,000 others more or less seriously wounded, a debt of twenty-two billion dollars of our own and loans of eleven billions to our allies.

If we remember these facts, the prospects of our remaining out of war will be improved.

DEFENDING DADDY

WHAT little things change one's mind. The cause of this original comment is the dispute between two representatives in congress, the gentleman from Texas, Mr. Maverick, and the gentleman from California, Mr. Kramer, who have opposite ideas about what residents of the United States ought to be permitted to say.

Naturally folk here and there have taken sides and just as naturally some have disliked Mr. Kramer. But it's fairly certain a few don't dislike him as much as they did since he clashed with Mr. Maverick.

When the two got in an argument in the speaker's lobby Mr. Maverick rung in Mr. Kramer's father. True, the observation was not offensive. Neither was it pertinent. So Mr. Kramer busted Mr. Maverick in the jaw and said: "You can cuss me all you want to, but keep my father's name out of it."

All of which only proves that men are but old boys of larger growth and even that in air-conditioned chambers "So's you old man" are still fighting words.

Besides, "My daddy can lick your daddy with one hand tied behind his back."

CONTRACT BRIDGE

By E. V. SHEPARD, Famous Bridge Teacher

A DANGEROUS TWO-BID

AN OPENING two-bid obligates keeping bidding open until game is reached. North held a single biddable suit, and that suit lacked its three top honors. The hand was worth eight tricks, rendering it a much better opening bid of 4-Hearts than 2-Hearts. The latter is a dangerous call as partner must expect better heart tops than are held. In case partner is strong the opening two-bid probably will mean a dangerously high contract. Only North and South were vulnerable.

♠ A 9
♥ J 10 9 8 7 4
♦ A K Q
♣ A 7

♠ K J 8
♥ K Q 6
♣ 9 5 4 3

♠ Q 10
♥ A 2
♦ J 9 7 4 3
♣ K J 10 6

Having two biddable suits and one and one-half quick tricks South insisted upon bidding both suits, while North insisted upon hearts as trumps. When the contract of 6-Hearts was doubled by West, it obviously could not be made. Then South bid 6-No Trumps which West also doubled.

An opening lead of the K of hearts would have handed declarer a small slam, 5-Heart, 5 diamond and the balance in the black suits, just by giving West a single heart trick. A low heart would have been an equally bad lead. West led his fourth-best club. Declarer dared not play his Ace of the suit. He had to let it run and East's Q fell to South's K.

Dummy ran off his three top diamond honors, forcing West to let go his lowest spade. East's play is useless to rectify. He was trickless. The fifth trick was taken with the Ace of clubs. To enter his own hand declarer was forced to resort to Vienna Coup tactics, leading a low heart and playing his Ace, thus establishing two top hearts in West's hand, to be reduced through forced discards.

Two club tricks were taken. Of course West followed suit. Dummy let go two hearts. At the end of the eighth trick the three players holding tricks had the hands shown below.

Dummy—
♠ A 9 ♥ J 10 9
West—
♠ K J ♥ K Q ♣ 9
Declarer—
♠ Q 10 ♥ 2 ♦ J 9

Declarer led a diamond. West let go his last club. Dummy discarded a heart. On the last diamond declarer led to let go one of his hearts. Declarer felt confident that West held the missing K of spades, but he took no chances. He let go dummy's low spade and retained the J-10 of hearts. West was put in with his K of hearts and had to lead a spade, giving dummy for the twelfth and thirteenth tricks a spade and a heart, just fulfilling the doubled small slam contract.

THE DEVIL'S MANSION

CHAPTER 36

DISCOURAGED after calling for Nita, Janet sat down. Nita had not heard. She must be outside. Far away, so far away she could not hear the bell. Perhaps she had gone to the town of Boisevain. . . . walked those miles to secure help. Comforted a little with this thought, Janet was calmer.

How long, though, would it take Nita to walk those six miles to Boisevain and those six miles back? Hours, probably. Hours. And in the meantime, she would be in the house. . . . this house which even Miss Boisevain feared so much.

Why did Nita want her to stay with Miss Boisevain? Janet stole a look at the woman lying on the chair bed. Did she just imagine or was it true that her face seemed happier and a slight smile lit her features?

Certainly the face did not look as it had in life, hard, with the eyes only softened and somewhat kind. Yes, and the skin which had been so yellow was lighter now. Younger Miss Boisevain looked by many years. . . . younger in death.

The girl's eyes were on the clock. Nita had been gone for an hour, now. An hour that seemed 10.

On the table near the dead woman, the lapis lazuli box lay, the lid open. Beside it the two miniatures. Janet remembered that the other, the one of the black haired man was under Miss Boisevain's pillow. She herself had placed it there, at the woman's bidding, along with the few letters.

On the table near the box, was the silver vial, hardly as big as her thumb. Also the gleaming red ruby.

On the polished surface of the table it was catching out red lights. Had it been in a ring? It was too large for that, she thought. Probably it had been the drop on a pendant.

Janet had seen but few jewels in her life. Never one as large as this. Vaguely she remembered as a child her father showing her her mother's jewels. So vaguely that she was not sure she had even seen them. She must have been very young. Then, she had never seen them again. They must have been sold to pay their living expenses. Perhaps she and her father had lived on the money they had brought for years and years. . . .

On Miss Boisevain's hand as it lay across her chest, she saw the crystal ring, with its plain silver setting. . . . a setting that did not bind the round clear stone at all.

What a queer woman she was! Despite her superstitions, Janet was positive she had a real reason to be afraid. This house. . . . the strange excitement in the few days she had been in it. . . . the dog. . . . Nita's dumb, true affection.

Timidly she glanced at the mirrorless frames. . . . glad for once she could see nothing in them, no reflection of the room, or the woman lying dead on the chair bed.

She longed to leave the room. Longed to go out through the kitchen, and to the stable where Miss Boisevain had said Blair Rodman was. Nita's note seemed more like a command to her than a request. She must stay, until the servant returned. Another hour went by. Janet was beginning to worry. But Nita could

JANET AND NITA were back in the kitchen. Nita sitting on a chair by the window looking out on the newly covered grave in the garden; Janet leaning against the sink. The big woman was fanning her hot face with her hand. Janet had tried to make the dead end of the living room and sit down, but she would do nothing except stay at the kitchen window and watch the grave.

She had shaken her head emphatically when Janet had asked her to rest. So the girl, because she did not wish to be alone, and because she wanted to keep Nita company, stayed with her.

A clean sheet had been carefully laid beside the grave. Nita had tenderly placed her mistress in it, and turning to Janet had taken the miniature and the letters and put them at the woman's side. Then she had folded the sheet around Miss Boisevain, and lifted her into the grave, and then, with her face, and, tears, streaming down her cheeks, heard the dirt fall into the grave as Nita shoveled it in. . . .

No prayer. Nothing. Yet it was as solemn, as tender, as beautiful as if the funeral had been in a cathedral. The song of the bees, the humming birds flitting about their little wings, the sun on its downward course in the heavens; the breath of the trees; the music of the fresh clean air. . . .

After the grave was filled, Nita had stooped to her knees for a moment and crossed herself. Then quickly rising, she had gone to a flowering shrub and gathered a handful of snowy white flowers, and had covered the dirt with them.

It was blooming now. . . . the grave. . . . a bower of pale blossoms and cool green foliage. . . .

"You should have called someone. . . . an undertaker, a doctor," Janet said as she looked at the servant. Nita shook her head, not taking her eyes off the grave.

"Will you go to the stable with me? Miss Boisevain. . . . the name came strangely, hesitantly to her lips. . . . "Miss Boisevain said that Mr. Rodman was there. I must see him and talk to him."

Nita took her eyes off the grave, and looked at the girl. That she had something to say, Janet was sure. Nita pointed to her room off the kitchen, and on the bed the girl found a piece of paper and a stub of a pencil. She hurried back with them.

"You must not leave me now that Miss Morelle is gone, or I shall die. Your friend is safe in the stable at present."

This note, when Janet finished reading it, she tore into bits, and handing the bits to Janet, indicated that she put them in the stove. "Can't we go out, and just see if he is there?"

Again Nita answered her in not walk that 12 miles in two hours. . . . that is if she had gone to Boisevain. . . . And Janet could think of no other place that she could go.

Now. . . . Now and then the girl walked to the window to see if she could see Nita coming up the road. If, she thought suddenly, if Nita had gone to Boisevain for help, she would only have to wait one way! Someone would take her back! She could make the six miles back in a car in a few minutes!

Although she listened intently for the sound of a motor, she heard nothing except the occasional shrill song of a bird outside, the stir of the bushes as their leaves touched each other in the wind. . . . She remembered the day she had come back from a short tramp and had found her father still and lifeless in his chair. . . . the frantic cry for help, and the mad rush to a telephone for a doctor. . . . four years ago. . . .

Miss Boisevain had said her eyes were tired, too old for her. It was true that she had suffered and suffered. . . . There were her lonely years with her father, and lonelier years afterward. . . .

One o'clock and no Nita. She might have fainted on the way in the sun. . . . It was warm out. Fainted from exhaustion and excitement, but Nita was strong and sturdy, old as she must be. . . .

A buzzing fly had settled on Miss Boisevain's hand. Janet coughed over and chased it away. But her fingertips touched the dead woman's hand, and she drew back, a sob in her throat. . . .

The hand was ice cold! . . . Janet sprang forward. It might be Rajah! With glazed eyes she looked at the swinging door. . . . It opened slowly, and Nita appeared, her face wet with sweat, her hair dragging over her plain face. Her dress was streaked with dirt and her hands were red and soiled. She walked straight to the dead woman, with not so much as a glance at Janet.

"Nita! Where have you been. . . . I've been so worried, so frightened. . . . Nita write it for me. Did you bring help?" Janet rushed to the table and brought her a pad and pencil. . . .

The servant still did not look at her. She was breathing hard and her shoulders were bent a little. . . . Taking the paper and pencil, and stopping over the low table, she slowly wrote a few words. Then bending over the chair bed, she took the lifeless body of her mistress in her arms, and started with her burden to the door. . . .

Janet looked at the note several times, before the words made any impression on her mind. . . . "I have been digging her grave." . . . The girl stumbled to the chair bed, and reached under the pillow for the letters and the miniature. She was sobbing hysterically as she followed Nita through the kitchen and into the garden to the fresh grave near the stone bench. . . .

She waited for a sound from the living room. There was none. It was as if Nita were in there alone. . . . Then taking heart, she ran quickly out the back door, and turned the corner of the house. The stable was in full view, and Blair Rodman was sitting at the high window. A low cry left her lips, when she saw he had a white handkerchief around his head. How pale his face was. . . . how drawn. . . . he must have suffered terribly. . . .

He saw her! And standing up waved his hand. She was making for the window when, just in time, she saw Rajah. He was at the stable door, growling. . . .

"Where have you been?" . . . "I tried to get out earlier, but so much has happened. . . . Miss Boisevain died this morning, and Nita has buried her. . . .

"Buried her?" . . . "Yes," they were talking in low tones, the girl half way to the stable and the man at the window. . . . "The dog has been here for hours. He won't move. I dare not go while he is there. . . . I've been worried sick about you."

"Promise me you won't try to leave until he goes! He is dangerous! Miss Boisevain said he would kill you. . . . you," she stopped suddenly. . . . "Don't worry. I won't. I don't like his looks. I'm starved. Can you manage to get something to eat for me?"

Janet ran back to the kitchen as fast as she could. Nita had not come back. Some bread, she could throw that up to him! She found a loaf, and hurried back with it. Rajah was snarling now, viciously. . . . Blair leaned far out the window, and Janet tossed the loaf. He caught it, and smiled his thanks, as he tore off a piece and started to eat. . . .

"Couldn't you take my car and get help?" he asked between bites. . . . "The car is gone from the front of the house. I don't know where. I thought of that—"

"Gone!" . . . "Yes, and it's just the same now that Miss Boisevain is. . . . dead. . . . there is someone in the house!" . . . "Do you know who it is?" . . . "No, but I think it's a man!"

Blair nodded. The how he had received. . . . the mysterious visitor who had kicked him. . . . all this pointed to the fact that a man was in the house. . . .

"Where is Nita?" . . . "She is in with him. . . . he just rang for her!" . . . "You haven't seen him?" . . . "No," and she shuddered perceptibly, and looked back over her shoulder. . . .

"If I could only get out of here!" . . . "Not while Rajah is watching!" . . . "Tonight, then. He can't stay for ever."

Blistering Note to Soviet Didn't Stop Envoy's Tennis Match

WASHINGTON—While Roosevelt's hot protest to Soviet Russia was sizzling over the wires to Ambassador Bullitt in Moscow, Ambassador Troyanovsky was at his summer home in Annapolis playing tennis.

Playing as his partner in doubles was rotund Robert F. Kelley, Chief Russian expert of the State Department.

Kelley had written the first draft of the note then being delivered in Moscow, knew almost every comma and semi-colon in it. Ambassador Troyanovsky knew nothing about the note. Both men played serenely on.

Suddenly a servant announced a telephone call from Washington. It was a newspaperman giving the Ambassador first news of the most bluntly worded diplomatic protest in American peace-time history.

The Ambassador listened, came back, resumed his tennis. He said nothing to Kelley.

After his tennis Mr. Kelley calmly motored back to Washington, went to the State Department, next day advised that diplomatic relations with Russia be severed.

NOTE—Kelley has never been in Russia, was chief adviser to Hughes, Kellogg and Stimson against Russian recognition, urged the Roosevelt Administration against resumption of diplomatic negotiations.

Friend of Labor

One of the most vociferous self-styled champions of labor in the past has been Senator Huey P. Long.

When the $4,000,000,000 Works Relief Bill was up he stalked the floor of the chamber for days, denouncing the President for insisting on his plan to pay security wages instead of the prevailing wage. And when Senators LaFollette and Wagner switched their votes and sided with the President, Huey accused the two liberal leaders of "selling out."

That was last winter. The scene changes to Louisiana. Several weeks ago George E. Wallace, second vice-president of the Louisiana State Federation of Labor, wrote an open letter branding

Huey as the foe of the working man.

He charged that, under Huey's dictatorship: Wages had fallen far below prevailing scales; The Kingfish had killed a bill giving workers the right to organize and bargain collectively;

The legislature, under Huey's orders, rejected an eight-hour bill for women; At Huey's behest the legislature had rejected the child-labor amendment. . . .

"Under his regime," wrote the outspoken laborer for 23 years standing, "wages in the state have declined, hours have been lengthened and the condition of the workers has grown steadily worse. Not a single measure of a social character has been passed."

Two weeks after his blast, Wallace was fired from his job as barber in a hotel at Alexandria, La. The manager said he feared loss of business if he kept Wallace.

When asked about the matter, Huey expressed elation at what had happened to his critic, predicted that Wallace would soon be kicked out of the barbers' union and lose his labor post.

"Labor," pontificated Huey, "won't stand for guys like that."

THEATRES

AT THE CLIFTONA

Hilarity vies with romance in trying to take the credit for the delightful new musical comedy, "The Girl Friend," which started its good-natured run at the Cliftona Theatre Sunday.

Gay, light-hearted and brimming with tunes that will have everyone hopefully pursing his lips trying to whistle them, "The Girl Friend" is a friend indeed. Ann Sothern, now a full fledged star, sings and dances her way through the film with all the charm and vivacity that has previously endeared her to our hearts.

Jack Haley, one of the merriest comedians of them all, goes through antics that will leave you as limp from laughter as your backbone will permit. He scores one of those rare personal triumphs that skyrocket a player to popular appeal, and Roger Pryor, the third of the main triumvirate, is as happy a leading man as has come this way in many a screen offering.

AT THE CIRCLE

"Beggars Holiday," the new Tower production, which will be shown for the first time locally at the Circle Theatre of two days, beginning Tuesday, is an original screenplay by Adele Buffington. The drama, written especially for Hardie Albright, J. Farrell MacDonald, and Sally O'Neil, who play the leading roles, is said to be a crook story with an unusual twist.

AT THE GRAND

She has never been compared to any other actress. . . . she is beautiful. . . . her moods are like a rainbow. . . . she is charming. . . . never had a beau. . . . goes to bed early, but not until she has said her prayers. . . . has a glorious speaking voice. . . . possesses a wealth of personality. . . . her face fairly sparkles. . . . her eyes dance in merriment. . . . fascinates and captivates her audience. . . . has never read a novel. . . . nor has she ever smoked a cigarette. . . . is far from dumb, though she can neither read or write. . . . is the constant companion of her mother. . . . and insists that she likes spinach.

Who is this fascinating? Shirley Temple, of course, whose new picture, "Our Little Girl," in which she acts and sings, is now on view at the Grand Theatre.

NOT SO GOOD

A western store ran the following advertisement: Apples, oranges, imported nuts. Come early and avoid the rush. The early bird gets the worm.

Reason for this inter-labor war is the fact that the United Mine Workers is an industrial union—all workers in the industry belong to one organization—but the machinists and metal trades unions are not. They are organized in craft unions—separate unions for each class of workers. This is the traditional A. F. of L. type of union.

Recently the machinists and metal trades unions have been attempting to invade the coal fields. But passage of the Guffey Bill would have made the United Mine Workers, together with beefy John L. Lewis, its president, supreme in the coal fields.

Hence the labor legislative war.

How to Make Your Walking Effortless and Efficient

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D. THE MOST beautiful statue in the world, to my mind, is the winged victory—the Nike of Samothrace in the Louvre.

Certainly it is the most moving of statues, for it fairly seems to be taking off into space. It gives the impression of action by the perfect position of the body—muscles and bones are placed perfectly for the posture of action.

To make your own walking effortless and efficient, place yourself in the proper posture of standing.

In sitting efficiently, you should sit well back in the chair so that your legs and thighs carry the burden of the weight. If the slumping posture is maintained and the weight is carried on the base of the spine and the pelvis, the back is rounded out,

WO GRID DRILLS CALLED

BLACK LANDRUM TAKES CHARGE OF RED, BLACK

ights Squad of 50; Promises to Give Every Boy Chance To Make Good.

Calling two practice sessions for Wednesday, one at 10 a. m. and other at 3 p. m., Coach Jack Landrum today had taken charge of the Circleville high school athletics. About 30 boys answered the call to practice on Labor Day and of them were given uniforms and some exercising on the football field. The rain Tuesday morning cut the squad, but Coach Landrum announced that rain or shine there will be two sessions Wednesday.

Wants 50 Out
In announcing the Wednesday sessions, Landrum urged all boys to want to play football to realize "those who get in some practice this week will have an advantage over those coming out later," he declared. The new coach, who comes here from Centerville, Ohio, wants a squad of 50 to carry through the entire season. "A boy who really wants to play football will be cut," the coach said. "I also announced plans for a team and urged that all members report for practice. Most of the athletes reporting are light but several who are working until school is out are more weight. 'We're not worrying about weight,' the Tiger editor said, 'but real condition fundamentals and willingness to play the game like it should played will make a lighter man valuable as a heavier one.'"

First Tilt Sept. 20
The first game on the schedule Sept. 20 and Groveport is the first game on the schedule. An effort will be made to make an all-star team for the Sept. 20 game which is now open. The Central Buckeye league will be on Oct. 4 with Andrew's Bobcats under a new coach, Jim Scott of Ohio State. Delaware is met a week later in the college town. The equipment supply at the school is quite low but the Stookey is planning to turn over the equipment made on the donkey ball game and the last graduating class has $35 that it may be able to transfer to the athletic fund. Landrum reported there would be equipment for every athlete.

Favor Cardinals, Tigers As Stretch Race Begins

International News Service Sports Writer

NEW YORK, Sept. 3.—Labor Day always marks the turn into the stretch in the baseball race and from here on in the teams with a chance to cut in on that world series melon really turn on the heat.

What are their respective chances? It's all very well to get steamed up over a ten-game winning streak of the Pirates but the cold figures throw a damper or such enthusiasm. Let's take an A. Smith at the record:

	Won	Lost	to Play
Cardinals	79	47	2
Giants	76	48	3
Cubs	79	52	2
Pirates	74	58	2

American League:

Tigers	83	44	26
Yankees	73	52	29

You will note from this that the Giants are the only team with a sporting chance in the National and the Yankees have virtually none at all in the American.

The Pirates' case is almost full of enthusiasm, or they won't be in there long. Those requirements are first in Coach Jack Landrum's note book and they've got to be obeyed.

Give Him Big Welcome
This column is urging all interested in athletics to get out on the field, show Coach Landrum you are being behind him and the boys and do anything you can to make the new mentor feel at home.

Dean Boys Again
It was the Dean boys again Monday. They put the Cards in first place a week ago and Labor day they tightened that grasp by defeating Pittsburgh in a double bill.

Caddy Exhibition
One of the keenest exhibitions of caddying on the Pickaway Country club course this year was that of Dick Nelson on Sunday.

He caddied for the janitor of this column for 36 holes; the same golf ball was used on all four rounds and never a minute was spent in hunting balls.

HANSON WINS TITLE MATCH AND GOLF CUP

Scores 4 Up and 3 to Go Victory Over Geib; Mowry-Mader Win Tennis Cup.

Although rain cut short the Labor day handicap tournament for The Herald cup, the Pickaway Country club enjoyed one of the finest holiday-week ends in its history with large crowds visiting the club and its grounds, scores playing golf and a large number of others playing tennis.

Pro Emil Hrobon announced today that John D. Bragg carding 39-41, 80 with a 13 handicap giving him a net score of 67 won the cup.

John Bragg and Harold Grant won merchandise prizes in the Labor day handicap.

Hanson Wins Title
Lent C. Hanson, steady golfer, won the club championship Sunday defeating Glen Geib in the 36-hole final match 4 up and 3 to go.

Hanson gains possession of a championship cup for the next year. Dewey C. Black held it during the past season.

The titlist took an advantage on the first two holes of the match and held it from there on. The morning 18 ended with Hanson 3 holes up. The contest was set at dormie at No. 4 on the fourth round when Hanson went five up with only five to play. Geib won No. 5 to make it four-and-four, but when both men parred No. 6 the match ended.

Hanson gained the final round by defeating Charles T. Gilmore, John Eshelman and Dr. G. D. Phillips. Geib eliminated C. M. Barnhart, Lou Vining and Dewey Black to win the shot at the title.

The championship is Hanson's first while Geib won it in 1930 from the late Earl Rader.

N. E. Reichelderfer won the class A title by default from George Myers who has not been playing regularly of late.

Mowry-Mader Win
Dave Mowry and Jane Mader won the tennis cup offered by Mrs. Paul Adkins in the Pickaway-co mixed doubles tournament from Tom Brunner and Jessie Mader.

The Mowry-Mader combination took the final match in two sets, 6-1 and 6-2.

Mowry, who becomes captain of the Wooster college team when he returns to school this fall, is about the keenest tennis player to appear here in a long while. He was ably assisted by Miss Mader.

Mowry during the summer has been working at the Circle City dairy. He is a school buddy of John Robinson, son of the proprietor.

Because of early darkness a new series of fall twilight meets will begin Tuesday, Sept. 10.

Visitors at the Club over the week-end included: Dr. A. L. Austin of Cleveland, celebrated book-setter, and Mr. and Mrs. John Hrobon of Cleveland, parents of the pro.

There are four new faces on the lesson tee: Misses Evangelina Smith and Martha Mader, Robert Smith, and Tom Brunner.

REPORT URGES HOME CHANGE AT SANDUSKY

Sherill Says Soldiers'-Sailors' Home Should be Converted To Mental Hospital.

COLUMBUS, Sept. 3.—Conversion of the Ohio Soldiers' and Sailors' Home at Sandusky into a hospital for the mentally ill, was urged today by the Ohio Government Survey in a stinging report to Gov. Martin L. Davey.

Asserting that costs of caring for members at the Sandusky institution are too high, the report asserted that "the Sandusky Home is duplicating the service and care provided by the Federal Government at the Soldiers' and Sailors' Home in Dayton."

Direct savings of $1,690,000 annually could be realized by the change, the Sherill committee said, and $1,200,000 additional could be saved by the state eliminating the contemplated expense for care of insane patients as outlined in the McIntyre Bill.

Is Law Sept. 4

Under this bill, which becomes law Sept. 4, the state assumes hospital costs for insane patients now being paid out of county treasuries; to private institutions where the patients are lodged because of inadequate facilities. To save the large expense in paying the private sanatoria and hospitals, the state would have to build new hospital accommodations.

It is known that the Welfare Department has been making a quiet investigation at the Sandusky Home for some time, and charges of inefficiency and mismanagement are being prepared. The cost of caring for each member at the Sandusky Home is $350.55 per year, while the per capita cost at Lima State Hospital is only $212, and at Toledo State Hospital, it is $155. The high costs, coupled with charges of lack of cooperation against Commandant Perry Null at Sandusky, led to the investigation which is expected to come to a head the middle of this month.

OFFSHOOTING

A much stronger animal than the ox, the buffalo has been a beast of burden for hundreds of years in India and other countries. Dangerous at all times in his wild state, he is remarkably fleet in spite of his build and his horns are long and powerful. A wounded buffalo will often charge and knock down an elephant. A tame buffalo will be obedient and patient for months and then, for no apparent reason, will suddenly turn rebellious and sullen. They are fond of water and lie in it up to their necks on hot days.

Eligible for Dayton

The Survey asserts that 259 of the 888 now enrolled at the Sandusky are eligible for care in the Federal home at Dayton, where there are sufficient facilities. For those not eligible to federal aid, other forms of relief are available which are better for the able-bodied recipients and more economical to the state.

TODAY'S DRAWING LESSON

A much stronger animal than the ox, the buffalo has been a beast of burden for hundreds of years in India and other countries. Dangerous at all times in his wild state, he is remarkably fleet in spite of his build and his horns are long and powerful. A wounded buffalo will often charge and knock down an elephant. A tame buffalo will be obedient and patient for months and then, for no apparent reason, will suddenly turn rebellious and sullen. They are fond of water and lie in it up to their necks on hot days.

$450 Clam Stew

COLUMBIA, Pa.—Dr. W. B. Hoffman, local dentist, missed a chance to collect $450 because he liked his clams steamed. Opening a clam at the dinner table, the dentist found a large, perfectly-formed pearl. Believing the gem to be of value, Dr. Hoffman had it appraised. He learned to his disappointment it was worthless because the process of steaming had cracked the pearl and robbed it of its lustre.
